Goals of Self-Study

- Refine and advance the UC Denver strategic plan (2008-2020) through the self-study process.

- Affirm the university's new mission, vision and values statements that were adopted by the consolidated university in 2008.

- Use the self-study process as a mechanism to further the goals for consolidation of the Health sciences and downtown campuses, document that the goals are being met and demonstrate how we operate as a consolidated university.

- Utilize the self-study process to enhance our commitment to student learning and success.

- Utilize the self-study process to document our accomplishments in research and creative work, to emphasize their importance in every academic unit of the university, and to outline a vision of future directions.

- Collaborate with external constituencies to assure that the university is an asset to and a partner with individuals and communities.

- Identify innovative approaches to educate the public about the value of the university as well as the multiple roles and services that UC Denver provides.

- Ensure that we continuously examine the external landscape to most effectively understand our strengths, our position in the evolving marketplace, areas for new prospects, revenue streams and challenges.

- Ensure that we meet or exceed our goals for diversity and inclusiveness.

- Assure that resources and technologies support our ability to achieve our vision for the university.

- Assure that the allocation of resources is aligned with our strategic priorities.

- Establish that UC Denver meets or exceeds the HLC/NCA criteria for accreditation.

- Demonstrate that UC Denver has responded appropriately to the findings of the HLC/NCA visit to the downtown campus (2001), to the HSC campus (1998) and the focused visit (2004).

- Reflect on the university's many accomplishments in the period since the last accreditation visits.
