Master of Public Health
Environmental & Occupational Health Concentration

Environmental & Occupational Health colorado school of public health
Environmental and occupational health professionals work to find ways to keep our environments and workplaces healthy and safe. Graduates with an MPH in environmental and occupational health play an essential role in protecting the public from exposures to biological, chemical and physical agents and promoting healthy lifestyles.

Examples of positions held include:

- Built Environment Specialist
- Consumer Safety Officer
- Environmental Hygienist
- Loss Prevention Specialist
- Occupational Health & Safety Specialist
- Occupational Medicine Physician
- Safety & Health Manager
- Agricultural Inspector
- Toxicologist
- Sanitary Engineer
- CDC Fellowships
- Ergonomist
- Industrial Hygienist
- Worksite Wellness Coordinator
- Food Safety Specialist
- Agricultural Inspector
- Environmental Protection Officer
- Environmental Health Policy Analyst
- Safety & Health Manager
- A

Learn more:

publichealth.ucdenver.edu/environmentalhealth
To apply for admission to the Colorado School of Public Health master of public health program, applicants are required to complete the online application at sophas.org.

Requirements for admission include:

- Official transcripts
- Personal statement
- Minimum GPA
- Resume or CV
- Official GRE scores
- Three letters of recommendation

To apply for admission, visit sophas.org
ColoradoSPH.admissions@ucdenver.edu | 303.724.4613
The Department of Environmental & Occupational Health focuses on preventing environmental and occupational health-related diseases and promoting health through education, research, professional and community service. Our programs prepare students to contemplate the causes and consequences of chemical contamination and poorly designed environments on human health and the ways in which public health professionals can intervene to improve the environment.