The revalidation process is required by university policy for any course that was taken more than seven years ago. Course revalidation will only be considered for core courses in which at least a “B-” was obtained and elective courses in which at least a “C” was obtained. To request revalidation of expired courses, submit for each course a one-page review of what you learned in the class, how the coursework applies to your profession, and what has changed in the field since you took the course. Please dedicate equal space to each of those three parts. Submit the forms to your student coordinator. The MPA Director will review them and schedule a conversation with you, and then will make a determination about revalidating the courses. Our objective is that your knowledge of the course material is current. You might consider reviewing relevant top public affairs journals, like Public Administration Review, Journal of Public Policy and Management, Policy Sciences, etc. for information about public management, policy process and leadership issues that have surfaced since you took the courses. For an elective course, consider also reviewing journals of your course’s specialization.
