Two wonderful human virtues are selfless generosity and kindness to strangers, especially when the acts of those virtues extend benefits to others well into the future.

Our graduate Anatomy Program thanks you and your loved ones for their extraordinary generosity.

Our faculty and our students receive essential knowledge, do vital research, and fortify their training with the important resources you have entrusted to our professional care.

Your family member’s donation will be as important in the future as it is now in the present.

In the words of poet Ella Wheeler Wilcox, “With every deed you are sowing a seed, though the harvest you may not see.”

We hope today to celebrate the impact your family members had on your lives and that they continue to have on ours.

Thank you again for joining us this afternoon to celebrate the generosity of your loved ones. Please join us now for a reception on the bridge on the second floor of this building. We also invite our guests to visit the Anatomical Donor Memorial Garden, a short walk from this building.

Thank you.
