What is it?
This is a non-clinical, all expense-paid week during which students will be touring the community, meeting with local community members, and experiencing what professional, family, and personal life is like in a rural area.

When and where is it?
This year’s Rural Immersion Week will take place in Sterling, CO June 13 - 17

Who can participate?
Participation is open to current and rising students in CU’s medicine, physician assistant, public health, nursing, pharmacy, and dental programs. Students outside of these disciplines with a strong interest in working in rural Colorado are also considered. Spouse/significant others are invited to participate.

What are the expectations?
In addition to fully participating in the five days of the program, participants are expected to attend an orientation session in May, write a one-page reflection paper, complete evaluation surveys, and give a group presentation on campus about the experience in September.

How many students can participate?
There are a limited number of slots per discipline since each program covers the cost for their participants. Typically, 12 - 20 people participate per year.

Who should I contact to learn more?
Mark Deutchman, Rural Track Director, mark.deutchman@ucdenver.edu
Melanie DeHerrera, Rural Track Coordinator, melanie.deherrera@ucdenver.edu

Visit: Medschool.ucdenver.edu/ruraltrack