   ii. Anesthesiology chair search – Dr. Mandava, the search committee chair, stated that the candidates for the chair of anesthesiology have been invited to conduct first round of interviews and are expected to be completed in the next month. The next phase will be finalists from the first round returning for a second set of interviews, meeting with additional key leadership on campus. The search is expected to be completed by the end of June. The search started with over 30 highly qualified candidates and approximately 10 airport style interviews were conducted.
   iii. The search committee for the Senior Associate Dean of Academic Affairs started with a strong pool of 12 applicants. The interviews with the Dean will be conducted parallel to interviews by the other Senior Associate Deans.
B. Fundraising Update
   i. Scott Arthur, Vice Chancellor for Advancement introduced some new members of his team. He and Jim Hodge presented case standards which are utilized nationally so that all academic institutions are comparing their fundraising efforts apples to apples. He expressed that the key relationship is the faculty partners and the donors. Stewardship is very important, and making people feel good about what they are giving. Acquisition and retention of top talent here is key. Salary is not expensive, their vision is expensive. “Joy” must be provided to benefactors, feeling good about what their gifts accomplish. Scott provided insight and tools for how to think about meeting the donor’s expectations and what is important to them. He and the other advancement officers appreciate being able to team with our faculty and administration in these efforts.

   i. Mary Ann Shea, PhD, is the director of the Faculty Teaching Excellence Program, member by association of the Academy of Medical Educators, and director of the President’s Teaching Scholars Program.       1. Highlights include:
         a. Introduction of Dean Reilly to the faculty senate occurred
         b. Neil Kraus met with them and discussed the proposed interdisciplinary building, relocation of the book store to Ed2 South and the shuttle station for the light rail.
         c. Tim Lockie did a presentation on I LABS – the software being utilized and rolled out to those who would like to use it for core lab management. More global engagement is encouraged.

Meetings are taking place to further address this topic and to assure that precautions are being taken so as not to affect any of the sensitive research and equipment in the existing buildings.

E. LITeS Program - Marc Moss, MD (Professor and Director, CCTSI Education Core) and Judith Albino, PhD (President Emerita and Professor, LITeS Director)
   i. Dr. Moss shared information on the class nominated a year ago, one of the best cohort they have ever had. He reminded everyone that ground breaking science requires multi-year interdisciplinary collaborations as teams and few people have been trained in how to work in that way. The goal of the program, part of the CCTSI, is to train and provide professional and executive training tailored to the needs of academics in the health sciences, create and sustain a strong group of colleagues who in addition to their own work will train others across the CU system, affiliates and CSU. Trains on management styles, conflict management, leadership and how to work with difficult people, building effective teams, and provide helpful feedback. Team projects are a part of the training. Generally Associate Professors and higher, including Deans, Chairs and alike are the individuals who participate. More than 130 individuals have trained so far in the program, which has a national reputation. The program engagement has often lead to new research collaborations. 50% of nominees are accepted. Very valuable program.

   ii. Dr. Albino thanked all in individuals who nominated candidates last year, including 3-4 people in the room who were part of the program. Program is for our senior leadership and faculty. She hopes even more will participate. She asked everyone to think about nominating excellent people, noting it is not intended to ‘fix’ people, but to enhance leadership skills. She also cited the ongoing network that has grown from the program. Looking also for in-tact teams nominations to participate. Up to 3-4 team cohorts will begin the program early spring next year. Some cost will be associated. Dean Reilly also shared that this could have a positive impact on our ability to secure more team type grants.

F. Dean Reilly gave a brief update about the VA, post a meeting this past week with the VA Deputy Secretary who visited the campus. Discussions took place about traffic and the impacts on the campus. The VA expressed a philosophy of cooperation and they were invited to participate in the Anschutz Executive Committee.
