Framing Community Engagement: A Health Equity Approach
Thurs., Oct 25, 2018 – 10:00-11:30 AM

We know that healthy communities are important so why is health equity often left out of our conversations on community engagement? In this dynamic and interactive session participants will learn how employing health equity strategies can make community engagement work more intentional and effective. Participants will be given a brief overview of systems of oppression and equity/health equity. We will then examine the ways in which these systems effect our ability to engage with community. Participants will then discuss the ways in which their own work does or does not utilize health equity strategies. Lastly, participants will be provided with tools on how to apply the health equity strategies learned to their own work. This article provides additional context for the webinar.

Following this event, the audience will be able to better:
- Identify and describe systems of oppression;
- Evaluate health equity strategies to select appropriate strategies to apply in their community engagement work; and
- Analyze their role in in/equity and community engagement to identify areas for enhancement and growth.

Speaker: Angel Smith, Health Equity and Community Engagement Specialist, Children, Youth and Families Branch, Colorado Department of Public Health and Environment
