I. REASON FOR PROPOSED ACTION

A change in the way the U.S. Department of State (USDOS) evaluates travel risk precipitated a review of all international travel-related policies. Language changes were required to be consistent with the USDOS’ travel advisory levels.

Additionally, non-academic student international travel (e.g., for conferences or Alternative Breaks) has been taking place, but the previous version of this policy only addressed academic-related international travel by students. There is also international adventure travel facilitated by the Health and Wellness Center. Thus, the definition of “student” was... expanded to include these various types of travelers, and “international” or “abroad” was expanded to also include U.S. territories where emergency services may be subpar to what we would expect in the continental U.S.

The policy outlines the minimum requirements expected from “student” international travelers and the consequences for policy violation.

The oversight for all student international travel is the responsibility of the Office of Global Education (OGE) within the Office of International Affairs. OGE is funded at 2.93 FTE from the general fund and the remaining staffing and operations costs are funded from those student participants that pay the OGE fee to participate in study abroad programs – e.g. faculty-led programs, internships, and through third-party providers. However, the population of students has been growing that are traveling internationally for practical, international rotations, independent research, and other international experiential learning. Note: this growing population does not pay an OGE fee for their study abroad services. There are approximately 150 students per year in this category with at least 100 of these students from the Anschutz campus. From 2010 – 2019, OGE developed a substantial reserve for emergency response, currency fluctuations, and enrollment fluctuations. However, from 2017 – 2019, almost half of this reserve was repurposed to support the ESL Academy off-campus rental costs. Given the resources required to support the growing number of students traveling abroad versus the ratio of those students paying an OGE fee, the OGE budget is now in a structural deficit. This deficit will need to be addressed in the coming years.
