A. Introduction

The purpose of this policy is to establish University of Colorado Denver (UCD) provisions for granting graduate student assistantships and tuition remission to graduate students who are enrolled in degree granting programs of UCD. It is the responsibility of each degree granting program and the Graduate School to ensure compliance with this policy. This policy applies to all graduate student assistantships and tuition remission granted by any degree granting program of UCD.

2. December 29, 2000, Executive Order to clarify OMB Circular A-21 language regarding the requirement for a “bona-fide employer-employee” relationship between the institution and the graduate student. The Executive Order clarifies that tuition remission costs of graduate students charged to federal programs (under the provisions of OMB A-21) are not contingent on there being an “employer-employee” relationship, for tax purposes, between the institution and the graduate student.
D. Definitions

1. Degree Granting Program is defined as a specific curricular graduate training track leading to a degree such as the basic sciences Ph.D. programs.

2. Graduate Student Assistantships are payments provided to graduate students for their research and scholarly services provided to UCD.

3. Tuition Remission is provided as a benefit above and beyond the graduate student assistantship. The award of tuition remission is given to the graduate student in order to enable him or her to pursue a program of independent research, training, and original study that focuses on the experience to be gained by the recipient. Tuition remission includes tuition, fees, student health insurance and student health services. It is expected that tuition remission will be non-taxable.

E. Policy

A graduate student may receive a graduate student assistantship to compensate him or her for the research or scholarly services provided to UCD from UCD funds if:

1. Graduate student assistantships are only charged to a source of funds when it is allowable relative to the source of funds for the award, e.g., benefits the project and when it is not defined as an unallowable cost; and

2. The graduate student continues to make contributions of “research or scholarly” services to UCD; and

3. The graduate student is making satisfactory academic progress in a program of study; and

4. The graduate program has a formal policy that is approved by the Graduate School, is updated annually, and that stipulates that all students within the program receive consistent treatment when receiving payment for research/scholarly services, tuition remission, and student health insurance.

A graduate student may receive non-taxable tuition remission awards provided from UCD funds if:

1. Tuition remission is charged in similar proportion to assistantship support to a source of funds when it is allowable relative to the source of funds for the award, e.g., benefit to the project/program, and when it is not defined as an unallowable cost; and

2. Tuition remission is awarded consistently to those graduate students receiving assistantships within a program without discrimination based on sponsored or non-sponsored resources; and

3. The graduate student is also receiving an assistantship to compensate him or her for the “research or scholarly services” provided to UCD; and
4. The graduate assistant’s assistantship appointment is half-time or greater; and

5. The graduate student is awarded tuition remission as a fringe benefit related to the assistantship he or she is paid for providing “research or scholarly services” to UCD; and

6. The graduate research assistant carries out activities connected with research studies assigned by the supporting department or principal research investigator during the time the student is admitted to the Graduate School each term of the appointment, therefore making the graduate student research assistant eligible for consideration for tuition remission; and

7. The graduate student receiving the tuition remission is making satisfactory academic progress.

8. Tuition remission may not be used as a form of compensation for services rendered. All research and teaching assistants need to be paid a wage for services performed. As noted in number 5 above, tuition remission is considered a student employee “benefit” in addition to wages paid.
Procedures

| Graduate School | 1. Prepares formal policy for granting graduate student assistantships applicable to graduate students enrolled in the Graduate School’s academic programs.
- Graduate student must be enrolled in curricular training track leading to a graduate degree.
- Student must be making contributions of “research or scholarly” services to UCD.
- Student must be making satisfactory academic progress in the program of study.
- All students within the program must receive consistent treatment for graduate student assistantships, tuition remission, and student health insurance.

2. Sends out policy to degree granting programs for verification and acceptance. |
| Degree Granting Program | 3. Reviews policy and communicates with Graduate School to resolve any issues.

4. Returns signed copy to Graduate School.

5. Notifies Bursar’s Office of clearing speedtype for tuition remission. Each degree program is assigned a clearing speedtype for processing tuition remission. Departments that do not have a clearing speedtype should contact the Finance Office. |
| Graduate School | 6. Prepares list of matriculated students by academic program and transmits in August of each year to degree granting administrators. |
| Degree Granting Program Administrator | 7. Completes appropriate human resource procedures/documents for processing Graduate School Assistantships.
- Personnel Effort Reporting System will generate quarterly effort report for students receiving assistantships (see UCD Fiscal Policy 4.7).
- Coordinates with the Principal Investigator’s department for processing necessary paperwork or data entry when the graduate student is performing assigned duties in a department outside the academic unit where the student is rostered in HR.
- Graduate Student Assistantships (use Human Resources job code 1505, research assistant, and account code 402205 or job code 1506, |
