A. Introduction
Increased reporting requirements by the Higher Learning Commission and by the federal government regarding the physical location (street address) of course offerings create the need for this policy. The University must be able to track, justify and manage the risks of off-campus course offerings at the homes of faculty.

B. Policy Statement
1. University courses shall not be taught in faculty members’ home or other private residences. Exceptions to this policy require approval of the Dean and Provost. A waiver form with requirements for an exemption and timeline is attached.

2. At the Denver campus, this prohibition includes individual class meetings. Voluntary social events, held outside class, are not prohibited, but are subject to all University regulations, including the alcohol policy.

3.a. At the Anschutz Medical Campus, with the approval of the Provost, Deans may identify courses or categories of courses that may be exempted from the requirements of this policy, except the reporting requirements. Deans should use the forms attached to this policy to record both individual course exemptions and ongoing exemptions for categories of courses.

3.b. At the Anschutz Medical Campus, clinical practice rotations are exempt from this policy as the Higher Learning Commission does not require reporting of clinical practice sites.
3.c At the Anschutz Medical Campus, occasional class meetings away from the designated classroom are allowed, if this practice is permitted by the individual school dean. Deans may also permit supplemental educational experiences, such as a journal club, away from the primary practice site, including the faculty member’s home.

C. Reporting Requirements
A faculty member who has been granted an exemption (identified in B. 3.a) to offer an in-home course is responsible for providing information on the course location to the Registrar’s Office for recording within ISIS (the student information system). The Office of Institutional Research and Effectiveness will then use the information within ISIS to report as required to the Higher Learning Commission.
