Management majors must be effective leaders and communicators with knowledge of business organizational structures. Proficiency in organizing, planning, coordinating, and directing events is desirable. Management positions often require strong problem-solving skills, along with the ability to work under pressure and with different levels of personnel. Management majors tend to possess the following personal attributes: they are decisive, resourceful, diplomatic, ambitious, assertive, patient, and personable. Most managers start out supervising a few staff, progressing to higher levels of responsibility as they prove their effectiveness. Since managers are found in virtually every organization in business, there are endless possibilities for employment. Management positions in non-profit and educational settings often require previous experience with those environments. Federal, state, and local government agencies also offer a wide range of opportunities.
