Graduate Criminal Justice Courses

CRJU 5001 – CJ Systems, Policies/Practice
Examines current critical issues in the justice system affecting law enforcement, courts, corrections, and recent social developments related to personnel. The development, implementation, and analysis of public policy in the field of criminology are explored in depth.

Section E01 | Online

Instructor: Lonnie Schaible| Lonnie.M.Schaible@ucdenver.edu
Dr. Lonnie Schaible joined the School of Public Affairs as an Assistant Professor of Criminal Justice in 2009. His research is currently focused on assessing the degree to which cultural features can help to explain cross-national variations in levels of homicide. He is also interested in how organizational change and occupational values are consequential for police cynicism and burnout. Prior to coming to UCCS, Dr. Schaible has worked as a Police Planner for the Spokane Police Department and as an Assistant Professor at Eastern Washington University. He earned his Ph.D. from Washington State University with emphases in Criminology and Social Psychology.

Subsequent to completing his MA at UM, he accepted an assistantship to the doctoral program in Sociology at Washington State University where he completed coursework in the areas of Social Psychology and Criminology. While completing his doctoral work at WSU, he had the opportunity to be exposed to world renowned scholars in the areas of criminology and social psychology including Peter Burke and Jan Stets (identity theory), Charles Tittle (control balance), Louis Gray (satisfaction balance), Gene Rosa (risk and environment) and Viktor Gecas (self efficacy and socialization). He also benefitted from the influences of a number of up and coming scholars in residence at WSU, such as Carter Hay, Tom Rotolo, and Clay Mosher. Among the most significant of these intellectual influences was Vik Gecas who served as chair of his dissertation committee, and greatly contributed to development of ideas for his dissertation on the impact of values and emotional labor within policing. Following a desire to apply his knowledge outside of academia, he elected to work as a Police Planner with the Spokane Police Department while he worked toward completing his dissertation. Although he enjoyed his time and service at Spokane Police Department, he found himself longing for the academic “life of the mind” and accepted a tenure-track position in Sociology and Justice Studies at Eastern Washington University. However soon he found that his teaching load did not permit sufficient time to fully pursue his research interests. In August 2009 he joined the School of Public Affairs on the Colorado Springs campus, and now works out of the Denver campus.

Section E01 | Online
Topic: Intelligence Writing and Briefing
Description: Description coming soon!

Instructor: Jillian Dardani Gonacha | Jillian.Dardani@ucdenver.edu
Jillian came to UC Denver as an instructor in 2016 after ten years of federal service at the National Counterterrorism Center (NCTC). At NCTC, Jillian served in a variety of roles, most recently as Senior NCTC Representative for the Midwest region. Jillian embedded with FBI Chicago on their Joint Terrorism Task Force for three years and worked closely with Federal, State, and Local partners on global and US-based terrorism investigations. Prior to her role as Senior Representative, Jillian served as daily Intelligence Briefer to Senior Counterterrorism officials at the White House, where she presented the Presidents Daily Briefing and other analytical products written by the intelligence community. Jillian joined NCTC in 2007 as an intelligence analyst in Washington DC, and produced intelligence assessments and briefings for senior policy makers in the US Government. This role also entailed working closely with federal partners to analyze and mitigate threats to the US Homeland, US interests overseas, and liaison partners across the globe. She was formally trained by the Central Intelligence Agency in intelligence analysis, and is the recipient of several awards including the NCTC Directors Award in 2009 for her work on a sensitive threat to the US Homeland. Jillian received her B.A. in History from the University of Colorado Boulder in 2004, and her M.A. in International Studies and a Certificate in Homeland Security from the Graduate School of International Studies at the University of Denver in 2006.

Section E02 | Online
Topic: Decision Making at the Street Level
Description: This class explores the dynamics of street-level decision-making in law enforcement. First, it examines prominent theories of decision-making. Second, it explores how any street-level decision is nested within constitutional and legal requirements at all levels of government. Third, it uses case studies to explore street-level decision-making, particularly the effects of stakeholders throughout communities, community history, laws, departmental requirements and dynamics, standards and practices of incident control, and more.

Instructor: GM Vogler | GM.Vogler@ucdenver.edu
& Sean McCandless | Sean.McCandless@ucdenver.edu
G. Michael Vogler has 21 years of law enforcement experience serving in patrol, investigations, training and community outreach. His areas of interest focus on leadership and the intersection of mental health and law enforcement. He is working on strategies for officers to assist members of the community with mental illness. His other area of interest is building resiliency in first responders as a defense against PTSD and cumulative stress. He currently teaches Law Enforcement and is developing courses in leadership and decision making. He has two children and spends his free time fixing bikes and reading Goosebumps.

Sean McCandless, PhD works for the UC Denver School of Public Affairs (SPA) as an academic resources coordinator and instructor. He has taught a variety of courses at the graduate and undergraduate levels, including public administration, political science, and English writing. Sean’s research interests revolve around social equity, public service, administrative ethics, and the intersections between constitutional law and public administration. He is published in Administrative Theory & Praxis, Public Administration Review, and several books.
