The Equity Training Series (ETS) is a series of workshops, training, and events designed to promote conversation among students at MSU Denver surrounding social justice and racial equity. The Equity Training Series' speakers, presenters, and facilitators aim to create a common language and vocabulary among MSU Denver students related to equity-minded student leadership. In keeping with the MSU Denver Student Affairs Division's commitment to antiracism, ETS aims to serve as a safe space and launching pad for dialogue and discourse among students from marginalized identities, their allies, and others to engage in this meaningful and impactful work.

Open to the Auraria campus, The Center for Multicultural Engagement and Inclusion and the Equity Peer Leaders proudly presents Dr. Travis C. Smith in a workshop on implementing strategies to becoming an anti-racist. In the workshop, Dr. Smith will explore the genetic makeup of systemic racism and identify tools to combat and dismantle it in our everyday lives. After attending the workshop, students will be able to:

- Define systemic racism
- Identify how systemic racism impacts society
- Define micro-aggressions
- Identify how micro-aggressions impact marginalized folk
- Implement tools and strategies to combat systemic racism
- Implement tools and strategies to support and advocate for marginalized folk
