Biography

Gloria has ten years' experience in family advocacy and five years' experience in implementing evidence-based solutions in healthcare and community organizations. Gloria brings with her the unique skillset of identifying, engaging, cultivating, and maintaining relationships with numerous stakeholders including local and state public health agencies, healthcare organizations, and individual community members. Her experience working with communities is closely intertwined with her current position as the 2040 Partners for Health Community Research Liaison. Additionally, Gloria is the Infant Mortality Specialist at Denver Public Health, where her focus is in the area of African-American infant mortality and health equity. Prior to her current roles, Gloria worked in public health, nutrition (the Women's Infant and Children's program), child care administration, and retail management. Gloria holds an MA in Health and Human Services Administration from Saint Mary's University and a BS in Nutrition and Food Science, from South Dakota State. Mrs. DeLoach also is a graduate of Family Leadership Training Institute (FLTI) and an experienced FLTI facilitator. Gloria's dedication to engage communities in their own health is driven by the continued need that exists in communities.
